

Poor Indeed

are those weighed down by mental depression. Men live in this world through buoyant nerve force. The loss of this force daily drags down to failure some of the world's brightest minds. Such a condition is commonly known as Nervous Debility. When you lose self-confidence and feel your strength, energy and nerve force slipping away, it is high time you seek sensible aid.

You prefer health and success to misery and failure.

Sexine Pills

have no equal as a nerve restorer. A couple of boxes will dispel that heavy feeling; the unnatural weariness disappears and replaces languor with new force and vigor of body and brain. Six boxes will cure any ordinary case of nervous debility. If not, you get your money back.

AMERICANS LIKE SCENTS.Tons of Violets Are Grown for Purpose of Making Pomade.

Throu'out the south, in southern California and the middle west there are many places where soil and climate are particularly adapted to flower growing, and the field is open for some energetic individual to start an industry which eventually might become as great as those of renown at Grasse or Nice. The Americans, it is said, are the greatest scent-using people in the world. Every year thousands of dollars' worth of perfumes and pomades are imported and distributed throughout the states. The best violet pomade, which is one of the most expensive made, sells at wholesale for not less than $2.50 per pound, while a number of others are hardly less expensive. In the hope of eventually supplying this demand violets during the last few years have been produced by the ton in southern California.

Pomades are first made, a sort of stock, from which the skillful perfumer extracts the odors by means of alcohol. The refuse, or waste material, he then, with a little judicious doctoring, makes into soaps, other pomades or violet waters. From roses pomades are usually made through the process called "exhaustion," stated simply, it is in the following way: Great pans filled with lard or beef fat are covered thickly with the petals of the blossoms and then heated by steam. As they begin to give up their essences their color pales, an occurrence which is the signal for their removal. The lard is then covered with fresh petals, which again are only allowed to remain on its surface long enough to lose their fragrance. Three or four times the lard is thus strewn with fresh petals, until it has become so thoroughly saturated with the odors that it will receive no more. The fat then is placed in a sieve and the thick substance which is pressed out of it is called pomade.

The distillation of scent is usually done by a machine, which collects the water or oil and thus obtains the very quintessence of perfume. Something of its value may be conceived when it is known that 10,000 pounds of rose leaves produce but one pound of the essence, but of such intense strength are these essences that with the aid of oils, resin or some animal secretions, perfumers, through combinations and manipulations, can obtain from them almost any desired scent. They can, moreover, keep strictly in pace with the fashion. It is because of this that we occasionally read of the immense sales which some favored orchid perfume has had, although we may know that this particular flower is quite lacking in the charm of fragrance.

At one time we had thrust upon us innumerable golden-rod perfumes, because the plant was then being talked about for the national flower. The sweet scented golden rod, solidago odorata, however, is the only one of the great tribe which has any perceptible odor, and that being similar to anise would hardly be agreeable to wear continually about one's clothes. At the present time violet is the most fashionable scent, and the flower has been perfected to an astonishing degree. Besides the output from various other places 200,000 pounds of these blossoms are used annually at Grasse in France and 40,000 pounds at Cannes and Nice. To obtain this perfume the flowers have to be treated in quite a different way from roses. Like heliotrope, tube roses, jessamine and mignonette, they cannot be subjected to heat. Therefore they are brought into contact with wool saturated with olive oil, through which their particular oils pass outward, or else they are exposed to lard thinly spread on framed sheets of glass. Of course, as with the rose leaves, these flowers are renewed until the grease is thoroughly saturated.

Everything, it must be remembered, in connection with the handling of the flowers must be done quickly, for much depends on their perfect freshness, their scent being their most elusive and quickly lost characteristic. At Grasse hundreds of women are about before dawn picking the blossoms, which they also clean and pile in great mounds in the work rooms. These places must be spacious, full of light and air, but never admit the direct rays of the sun. Owing to this very necessity for speed the yearly product of essences, which is now enormous, would not be possible were it not that the flowers follow each other in succession in their seasons of blooming.

Always there seems to be a demand for some new scent. The well known frangipani essence, which at one time was only detected on a certain select few, is made up from several species of plumeria, a genus of plants which grows in certain parts of South America, and in the West Indies, or perhaps more especially from plumeria rubra. The Japanese, Glitch, now the most exclusive and fashionable scent, leaves a wave of faint impressions similar to the odor of sandalwood.

To the women who would seek for money or renown in the producing of original scents or soluble pomades it may be hinted that knowledge must in some practical way be gained of how first to obtain lard absolutely pure and without the slightest tinge of odor. It also must be so clarified that rancidity is impossible, or all pomades will fall before the tests to which the dealers subject them.—Washington Star.

THE CONQUEST OF COREA.

Seventeen centuries ago the Japanese Emperor Chuai was playing his lute in the presence of his wife and prime minister. Whether on account of the music or from some other cause, the emperor became inspired with a divine afflatus and began to utter the thoughts put into her mind by the deity. "There is a land to the westward," she exclaimed, "and in that land is abundance of treasure, gold and silver, dazling to look upon. This land I will now bestow upon you."

The emperor pushed away his lute. "If you go up to a high place and look toward the west," said he, "there is no land to be seen, but only the great waters. They are lying spirits who have spoken to you."

Then the god was filled with anger, and again he moved the emperor to prophesy. "You are not fit," said he, "to rule this empire. Go the one road!" But the prime minister trembled when he heard these words, and said to his master, "I am troubled, my heavenly sovereign, by this terrible message. Continue, I pray, to play the august lute."

The Emperor Chuai commenced to play softly; gradually the sound died away; all was still. They held a light to his face and saw that he was dead. But the emperor put herself at the head of her fleet, invaded the land of gold and silver with her warriors, and soon made the three kingdoms of Corea tributary to Japan.

These things happened, we are told, in the year 201 A. D., and the story of the valiant emperor is as familiar to a Japanese as is that of Bonanza to ourselves.—Nineteenth Century.

VACCINATION AND DANDRUFF.

There is Sure Prevention of Baldness as There is of Smallpox.

It is now accepted that vaccination renders the person vaccinated exempt from smallpox; or at worst he never has anything but the lightest kind of a case. Now as sure a preventive and cure for dandruff, which causes falling hair and baldness, has been discovered—Newbro's Herpicide. It kills the dandruff germ. C. H. Reed, Victor, Idaho, says: "Myself and wife have been troubled with dandruff and hair falling for several years. We tried remedies without effect until we used Newbro's Herpicide, two bottles of which cured us." Hundreds of similar testimonials.

ALONE HE DID IT.

A poverty stricken pavement artist stood near some chalk drawings in one of the main streets of Leyburn. His sketches were more than usually crude, but he seemed to be unconsciously proud of them, for he waved his hand toward them every few moments, the while he smiled and bowed gracefully to the passers-by, who passed by very quickly.

Thus they missed the richest part of the exhibition—namely, a wretched crowd underneath the pictures. It read:

"I have done this, kind friends, to show I am a poor artist."—London Answers.

You may as well expect to run a steam engine without water as to find an active, energetic man with a torpid liver, and you may know that his liver is torpid when he does not relish his food or feels dull and languid after eating, often has headache and sometimes dizziness. A few doses of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets will restore his liver to its normal functions, renew his vitality, improve his digestion and make him feel like a new man. Price 25 cents. WHEN THE DEAD AWAKEN.

Strange Events in Which Corpses Have Seemed to Feign Life.

Live persons have feigned death with marvelous exactness, but when the dead feign life, or seem to feign life, the spectacle is as gruesome as can be imagined.

Not long ago a Russian cemetery was the scene of as weird a wedding as ever has been witnessed. A young girl who had been betrothed died on the eve of her marriage, and her friends decided that, in spite of the intervening hand of death, the marriage should be carried on, and the ceremony was performed at the side of the grave, and after the marriage the body was returned to its coffin and lowered to its long resting place.

It is less than a year ago that a valuable cup was won in a bicycle race in Australia by a man who was dead when he passed the winning post. The race took place at an "electric light carnival," so called, in the presence of 10,000 spectators. In the last lap James Somerville, a rider, forged to the front and secured such a lead that his victory was assured. When within twenty-five yards of the finish he was seen to relax his hold on the pedals. He did not fall from the machine, however, and amid the frantic cheers dashed by the goal, winning the race by half a wheel. As he passed the finishing post he pitched forward and fell to the ground. When he was picked up he was found to be dead, and what was more, the doctors declared that death had come to him when he was seen to lose his hold of the handle bars. It was a dead body that had ridden the last twenty-five yards of the race.

On a recent voyage the sailing schooner Arietis was cruising about 200 miles off the coast of British Columbia, when she sighted a dismantled ship. The Arietis bore down upon the derelict, and as she got near enough a man was seen on board grasping the wheel and apparently steering the craft. No other sign of man was seen on the ship. The man at the wheel was hailed, but returned no answer—just stood there grasping the spokes of the wheel and looking straight ahead. A boat was lowered and the mysterious ship boarded. When they came close to the man at the wheel they saw with horror that he was dead and had evidently been dead for many days. The ship, which was named the General Siglin, had sailed from San Francisco for Alaska. She had clearly been dismantled in a gale and then abandoned by her crew. The captain had refused to leave the ship, and, finding his strength failing, he had lashed himself to the wheel and literally died at his post, steering the craft for hundreds of miles, with hands that held the wheel in as firm a grip as when alive. —Chicago Inter Ocean.
